Indian Americans: A Key Pillar of the India-US Relationship

With over 5 million people of Indian origin, Indian Americans are the second-largest immigrant group in the United States, after Mexican Americans. This thriving diaspora has a strong economic, academic, and technological presence, boasting the highest median household income and second-highest per capita income among Asian ethnic groups. They also play a crucial role in the US startup ecosystem, having co-founded 72 out of 648 unicorns.

The Indian American community grew by 50% between 2010 and 2020, with 70% of foreign-born Indian Americans arriving after 2000. Concentrated primarily in California, Texas, New Jersey, and New York, they are a high-propensity voting group with rising influence in politics, business, and innovation. With over 300,000 Indian students currently studying in the US, contributing $8 billion annually and driving job creation, the structured movement of students, professionals, and business leaders is a crucial aspect of India-US bilateral ties.
